Workers' Rights

All Canadian provinces and territories have laws in place to protect the health and safety of workers. The laws provide all workers with the following three rights:

Right to know

About hazards in the workplace, including potential exposure to COVID-19, and how to protect yourself.

Right to participate

Through your health and safety representative or safety committee.
By discussing health and safety concerns with your supervisor.

Right to refuse unsafe work

That you believe is dangerous to your health and safety or that of another worker.
Immediately report work refusals to your supervisor and follow the specific steps for your province or territory.

Your Union

Collective Agreement

As any member of a union, your Collective Agreement is the most important thing to understand. A Collective Agreement or Collective Bargaining Agreement (CBA) is an agreement between employers and employees which regulates the terms and conditions of employees in their workplace, their duties and the duties of the employer. It is usually the result of a process of collective bargaining between an employer (or a number of employers) and a trade union representing workers (that's you.) The terms and conditions in your Collective Agreement outline everything from vacation, sick time, seniority, bumping rights, hours of work rates of pay, safe work practices human rights and many others. This agreement is a legally binding document and employer and employee are both obligated to abide by it. You are entitled to all the terms and conditions outlined in your agreement, although the interpretation of the wording can sometimes be contested.

Union Stewards

A union representative or, union steward is an employee of an organization or company, who represents and defends the interests of their fellow employees but who is also a labour union official. Rank and file members of the union hold these positions voluntarily (through democratic election by fellow workers or sometimes by appointment of a higher union body) while maintaining their role as an employee of the firm. As a result the union steward becomes a significant link and conduit of information between the union leadership and workers.

The duties of a union steward vary according to each labour unions constitutional mandate for the position. In general, most union stewards perform the following functions:

- Monitor and enforce the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement (labour contract) to ensure both the firm and union worker are not violating the terms of the agreement.
- Ensure that the firm is in compliance with all federal, provincial and local laws and regulations.
- Represent and defend fellow workers whom the firm believes violated company policy or the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement, often through the grievance process,
- Communicate and disseminate official union policy , memos and directives to workers in the shop.
- Popularize and promote union consciousness and values in the workplaces
